Monsanto Recognized by BLM for Their Public Land Efforts

The Bureau of Land Management is pleased to announce that Monsanto Company's Soda Springs plant is the winner of the "Partners in the Public Spirit Award" for Idaho. This award honors authorized users of public land who have gone beyond contractual obligations to restore and enhance the lands.

"Your company and its commitment to restore land disturbed by phosphate mining is exemplary, and goes far in demonstrating your consideration of Idaho's environment, economy and citizens," Delmar Vail, BLM state director said.

Monsanto was one of six winners from around the country to be given the award.
